700 JAP SAILORS CRUISE IN CITY ON "RUBBERNECKS"

Little Brown Tars Swarm Aboard Sightseeing Autos and Take In Great White Way and Other Show Places.

Seven hundred of the spryest, brownest, bowleggedest, nippiest, politest, smilingest little sailormen anybody ever saw viewed the manifold delights of New York from the proud eminence of the dorsal fins of a cavalcade of rubberneck hacks to-day. They came, these 700, from mong led the next His Majesty the Emperor of Japan's two warshaps now in this har- lines against the der bor-the Tsukuba and the Chitose-which sound like two new brands

Took In Great White Way.

Drop curtains of mist still covered the els as they swung at anchor in the Hudson River when the launches nosing in toward shore, bringing half of the enlisted men for the day's outing that had been arranged them by the Japanese merchants of this city. On shore at the foot of West Beventy-ninth street stood the receptwenty flat-footed dittoes, a hundred Americanized Japanese in high slick hats and long frock coats, with shoulder streamers of red and white that squirt on top of an ice cream soda nursemaids from the mansions

Fired at Other Policemen.

When Policemen Klingel and Mac-Mahon sprang for him he waved the gun at them and shouted;:

"Lemme alone!"
They came on him, undaunted, drawing out their billys, and were almost upon him when he pulled the trigger. The cartridge exploded, but the bullet went high over their heads. Klingel cracked the weapen out of his hand with his club and he and MacMahon grabbed him by both arms.

He struck at them wildly with both hands, at the same time kicking out at their shins. Then they gave him the stick over the head and in the back of the neck. Even this wouldn't subdue him, and he was still struggling and fighting like a maniac when Sergit. Wagner came running up with his nightstick out. He swung his club where he knew it would do the most good and the three policemen soon had their drunken fellow-officer down on his knees.
